

DIGITAL LEARNING RESOURCES: FARMED ANIMALS

Freedom to roam and be social

Kids love learning about farmed animals. They are often in awe to see a being that looks completely different from them, but is still thinking and feeling; just like they do! This guide gives an up close and personal look at animals living in farmed animal sanctuaries and related learning.

A home of their own

Farmed animals, like us, have a need to explore and be social. They like variety. When they have access to new spaces, they immediately start sniffing, scratching, munching, and 'decorating' – making the space their own! Farmed animals were domesticated long ago from wild animals and they retain many behaviours that make them unique. We do share something with farmed animals. We can feel emotional and physical pain, and they can too. We can do our part to improve farmed animal's lives by eating plant-based foods, reducing the number of animals that are made to suffer from intensive farming.
